

Packing

Packing puzzles typically require one to fit pieces into a tray (two dimensional) or a box (three dimensional), although sometimes the problem is to fit the pieces into a particular shape. Perhaps the most well known example, which has been around for centuries, is the tangram, where the goal is to use the same set of simple two dimensional shapes to make many different shapes.